April 1997: This two-story, frame house features an L-shaped plan covered by a cross gable roof. Hipped roof wall dormers punctuate the elevations on the northeast corner. A hipped roof wraparound porch extends around the north and east elevations. The entrance is placed in the corner of the inside angle of the "L" and is set at a diagonal. The entry is embellished by sidelights and a transom. Exposed rafter tails and a cut wood gable end ornament in the east gable. The house sits on a stone foundation of random rubble.

September 2007: The wraparound porch has been replaced with a smaller porch on the northeast corner of the house. The one-story L-shaped porch shelters the main entry. The shed roof of the porch, supported by brick piers, slopes inward. The porch is set on concrete piers. The house has been reclad with vinyl siding and the original wood windows have been replaced with six-over-six double-hung, vinyl-sash windows. The overhanging eaves remain, but the rafter tails have been removed and the soffits have been covered with vinyl siding. A large two-story addition, circa 2005, has been constructed on the rear elevation of the house. The front-gabled addition is clad with vinyl siding.

The masonry building is constructed of six-course Flemish-bond brick. The exterior-end chimney is constructed of brick. The side-gabled roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Two large shed-roofed dormers are located on both the north and south elevations. The dormers are clad with vinyl siding and feature six-over-one double-hung, vinyl-sash windows and four-light vinyl casement windows. Other fenestration includes eight-over-one double-hung, vinyl-sash windows, four-light vinyl casement windows, and a single-leaf wood door. All windows on the main block sit on rowlock sills. This former Cape Cod dwelling was altered circa 2007. The shed roof dormers were added at that time, as well as a full-width one-story porch on the facade. The shed-roof porch is covered with asphalt shingles and is supported by square wood posts. A one-story full-width addition was constructed on the rear elevation. The addition is clad with vinyl siding and is topped by a shed roof covered with asphalt shingles. Fenestration includes four-light vinyl casement windows.

February 1996: This house is an excellent example of the Queen Anne architectural style. Features that exhibit this style include the following: double-hung sash windows with multi-light colored window panes in a box pattern over a single pane of glass; decorated verge boards at the gable ends; a pent roof enclosing the gables; a cut-away bay; a one-story porch that wraps two adjacent walls; and a sunburst design in the main dormer gable on the south elevation. A turned wood finial is located at the apex of the front dormer gable. Other Queen Anne details include turned wood porch columns with brackets, a decorative patterned masonry chimney, and a string of modillions that line the eaves throughout.

October 2007: The two-and-a-half-story house, located at 5627 3rd Street South, was completed in 1889 for an estimated cost of $5,000. Indicative of the Queen Anne style, the house has an irregular plan with projecting square and canted bays, wrap-around porch with turned posts and scrolled brackets, bargeboard with roundels, finial and spindle drops, sunburst motif in the gable end, and scrolled modillions along the overhanging eaves of the narrow ogee-molded cornice. The first story is illuminated by large elongated one-over-one double-hung windows, while the upper stories of the façade are pierced by paired and triple windows with Queen Anne sash. The high, steeply pitched hipped roof, which is covered in square-butt slate shingles, is pierced by front-gabled dormers capped by enclosed tympanums, and a tall brick chimney with a corbelled cap and recessed panels.

September 2007: This Classical Revival-style two-story, four-bay single dwelling has a rectangular plan. Set on a solid concrete block foundation pressed to appear like brick, the façade of the structure is faced with stretcher-bond brick, while the side elevations have been stuccoed. An exterior-end brick chimney of stretcher-bond brick with a corbeled cap pierces the roof. The asphalt-shingled front-gabled roof features an intersecting front gable, overhanging eaves, cornice returns, and wall gables on the side elevations. A one-story, three-bay porch is located on the façade of the dwelling. The porch is built on wood piers and the front-gabled roof is supported by wood Tuscan posts. Additional notable features of this dwelling are the brick and stuccoed belt course and quoins. The dwelling is fenestrated with six-over-six and paired six-over-six double-hung windows with vinyl sash, a fixed segmental arch twenty-four-light window, a paired casement window, and a single-leaf paneled wood door with sidelights. A one-story, one-bay porch was added to the rear (north) elevation. The asphalt-shingled hipped-roof is supported by wood posts.

Primary Resource Information: Meeting Hall, Stories 1.00, Style: Italianate, 1892

December 1992: Carlin Hall has a cross-plan design, approximately 45' wide by 30' deep. The two pairs of arms are of equal width, but the east and west arms project nearly two-and-a-half times farther than the north and south arms. Carlin Hall is sheathed in wood siding of two designs separated by a wooden belt course. Vertical beaded board is used below the belt course and 5" German siding above. The beltcourse also serves as a sill for the windows. Cornerboards are interrupted by the beltcourse and rest on the wooden water table. A wooden bracketed cornice wraps the entire building and the four gable pediments. Centered atop the roof is a four-sided wood cupola with a pyramidal metal roof sheathed in standing seam metal. On the principal (south) elevation, two doorways flank the projecting pavilion. The western doorway, sheltered by a porch added in the 1960s or early 1970s, is the main entrance. Each door is surmounted by a four-pane, rectangular, glazed transom and flanked by three-pane sidelights. A similar doorway at the north elevation has been converted to windows, but the transom and sidelights remain. Coupled windows are centered in the east and west projecting pavilions; sets of five windows fill the north and south pavilions. All are nine-over-nine double-hung sash. The cornice molding on the doors and windows incorporates a decorative motif of rectangular blocks resembling exaggerated dentils. These blocks are extended on the side trim and mullions, suggesting brackets. The cornice and the four gable pediments carry simple wooden brackets. The cross gable roof is covered in standing-seam terne metal, as is the porch roof. The eaves are wide, and the cornice is boxed.

The interior of the building is organized into three rectangular sections. The western section includes the entryway, bathrooms, and kitchen additions. The main hall occupies the center section; a second space known as the "alcove room" forms the eastern section; the entryway, bathrooms, and kitchen are located in the western section of the building. The main hall is 19'-2" x 29'-2". The original bead board wainscoting was removed, and the walls now are all plaster. The ceiling, now 15'-3" high, was lowered slightly to accommodate wiring and air ducts. It is composed of stained wood boards running the length of the room.

January 2008: The most visually prominent building constructed in Glencaryn in the two decades after it was platted is Carlin Hall, a community center and meeting hall erected by builder Theodore Bailey under the direction of the Carlin Springs Cooperative Association. Originally known as Curtis Hall, the community center at 5711 4th Street South was completed in 1892 and is the embodiment of high-style architecture from the Victorian era in the late nineteenth century. The one-and-a-half-story building is constructed of wood frame clad in vertical beaded board below the square-edged belt course and German siding above. The T-shaped plan sits on an uncoursed stone foundation. The gable ends created by the cross-gabled roof are enclosed by an elaborate entablature composed of a wide frieze with scroll-sawn brackets, ogee-molded boxed cornice, quadrant-bead bed molding, and raked cornice. The tympanum is faced with vertical beaded board pierced by oculus openings, some with louvered wood vents and some with four-light windows. Covered in standing-seam metal, the roof is capped by a cupola that allows for ventilation through louvered wood vents set in the semi-circular-arched openings that pierce the four sides of the structure. It is covered by a pyramidal roof of metal sheets with a wide overhanging ogee-molded cornice supported by ornately scroll-sawn brackets. The roof is topped by a ball and tapered lightning rod to emulate a finial. The narrow, elongated window openings, both paired and banded, hold nine-over-nine double-hung sash set in wide square-edged surrounds. The decorative lintels are composed of "rectangular blocks resembling exaggerated dentils. These blocks are extended on the side trim and mullions, suggesting brackets." The projecting lintel caps have an ogee-molded profile. The primary entry opening, fronting 4th Street South, is sheltered by a flat-roofed porch with square posts, spindle work, and a replacement metal balustrade. The wide door of six recessed panels is framed by narrow sidelights and a large transom. The square-edged surrounds are finished with exaggerated blocks that extend from the lintel, similar to those ornamenting the window openings. A second entry along 4th Street South is similarly detailed, but has a projecting ogee-molded lintel cap, a narrower transom, and lacks the ornate porch. A one-story addition with a shed roof was constructed on the northwest corner of the building in the early 1920s.

February 1996: The Backus House is the result of the joining of two small cottages. The two-story, frame cottage to the east dates from 1890, and the shingled, one-and-a-half-story, front-gabled house to the west was built in 1906. The two houses were combined in the mid 1920s. The original portion of the building, encapsulated within the 1920s renovations, is three bays wide with an inset porch located under the main side gable roof. The one-and-a-half-story dwelling was originally erected in a Late Victorian/Folk Victorian style with minimal ornamentation. The 1906 portion of the building exhibits the Craftsman period with its use of multi-paned casement windows, wood shingle cladding, and overhanging eaves. At the rear of the original part of the dwelling is an unusual feature dating from the 1920s renovation: a chimney of brick and stone laid in a serpentine pattern.

January 2008: The house was extensively altered circa 2005. The large two-story, six-bay dwelling has a rectangular plan and is clad with vinyl siding. The side-gabled roof is covered with asphalt shingles. The house has two projecting front-gabled bays on the facade. A two-story, one-bay projecting bay is stacked in front of a two-story, two-bay projecting bay. On the side (east and west) elevations of the house, the first story stretches beyond the second story of the house. Fenestration consists of paired twelve-light vinyl casement windows and six-over-six double-hung, vinyl-sash windows. The main entry is a double-leaf wood replacement door which is sheltered by the one-story, five-bay porch formed by the overhang of the roof on the first story. The porch is supported by square wood posts.

February 1996: This two-story house is a good example of the Queen Anne architectural style. Features of this house that exhibit this style include a cross gable roof; an asymmetrical, one-story porch that wraps around two sides of the house; decorative window surrounds on the primary elevations that feature a string of dentil moldings. The gables are sheathed in vertical wood boards; the rest of the house is covered with wood German siding. The wood porch posts are basically square with chamfered edges in a decorative design. The original hardware located on the front doors is intact, as is the tongue-and-groove wood floor boards on the porch. A small oval window is located on the north side of the house on the first story.

February 1996: This house is a good example of the nineteenth century Queen Anne architectural style. Features of this house that exhibit this style include the following: multi-light sash windows over a larger expanse of glass, in this case a two-light window sash; an polygonal two-story tower at the corner of the house; decorative infill in the entry porch gable in a stylized half-timbered design; ornate woodwork at the porch entry and at the turret cornice. The entire house is sheathed in narrow wood clapboard. The door is original to the construction of the house and features a molded pattern of wood panels in a square design in the lower half of the door and an arrangement of smaller window panes in the top half of the door. The roof is side-gabled with a long flared end on the north elevation creating the porch overhang. The roof line is not representative Queen Anne style, with its relatively clean-lined and contained shape, unlike the more complicated cross gable roofs of the Queen Anne style. There is an interior brick chimney with a corbeled cap and a one-story, two-bay porch supported wood posts.
